

Mills Oakley boosts Brisbane property team

1 November, 2019

Leading national independent law firm Mills Oakley has added a new dimension to its property practice with the hire of partner Heath Gleig-Scott in Brisbane.

Mr Gleig-Scott was most recently head of the property team at Holman Webb Brisbane. He has also spent large parts of his career at Minter Ellison and Corrs Chambers Westgarth.

Heath's expertise includes commercial acquisitions and disposals, as well as acting for major commercial and retail landlords and tenants across all asset types and jurisdictions. He also has experience in the development of residential and major mixed use projects, including layered body corporate arrangements and harbour developments and the documentation of land use agreements for the private sector and government owned organisations.

Heath has particular experience in the area of mortgagee-in-possession sales and distressed asset workouts, including mortgagee appointed receivership and liquidation issues.

Commenting on this hire, Mills Oakley CEO John Nerurker said that Heath would add a new facet to the team:

"Our current Brisbane property practice has a strong reputation in the area of leasing which will be complemented by Heath's deep experience in the acquisition, development and disposal of property. Heath's practice also shares a number of clients with our own," he observed.

Heath said that he was looking forward to being part of the Mills Oakley team:

"I have observed Mills Oakley go from strength to strength over the past decade in Brisbane and I am excited to be part of one of the great success stories in our local market, as well as nationally. In joining Mills Oakley, I am looking forward to being able to provide a full range of legal services to my current and future clients." he observed.

Heath commences with Mills Oakley today.
