

Mills Oakley strengthens Sydney Workplace Relations team

28 October, 2019

Leading independent national law firm Mills Oakley has further strengthened its Workplace Relations practice with the hire of partner Rachael Sutton from Holman Webb in Sydney.

Ms Sutton's expertise covers the full range of workplace relations law including industrial relations, discrimination, work safety and workers' compensation. In the latter area, Rachael advises a number of self-insured clients including a 'Big 4' Australian bank and several global businesses in the infrastructure services, hospitality and aged care industries. Her client base also spans the local government, financial institutions, food, infrastructure and construction sectors.

Commenting on this hire, Mills Oakley CEO John Nerurker said that the firm was committed to the growth of its market-leading Workplace Relations offering:

"Over the past two years we have diversified our Workplace Relations offering with the launch of a specialist Work Safety sub-team and addition of new senior talent in several cities," he observed. "In Rachael, we are gaining a new colleague who is particularly well regarded for her workers' compensation expertise, in addition to her deep Workplace Relationships experience across a number of key sectors."

Rachael added that she was attracted to Mills Oakley's growing profile in the Workplace Relations space:

"I am particularly looking forward to working with partner Malcolm Davis to grow the Sydney practice and exploring the promising client synergies which exist with other parts of the firm," she said.

Rachael commences with Mills Oakley today.
