Mills Oakley expands Sydney disputes and insolvency practice

18 January, 2023

Leading national law firm Mills Oakley is expanding its Sydney dispute resolution and insolvency capability with the hire of partner Marc Rossi from Hicksons.

Marc is an insolvency, recoveries and dispute resolution lawyer with expertise across the full spectrum of insolvency matters including bankruptcy, liquidation, administration, receivership and restructuring. He also advises on recoveries, financial services, securities enforcement, lenders mortgage insurance and title insurance.

Marc has represented and advised major Australian and international banks, lending and financial institutions, leading insurance companies, Australian Government bodies, major Australian and international insolvency firms, corporations, company directors and various stakeholders. He has extensive experience running recoveries and insolvency litigation across various industries and has appeared in various judicial forums including the Local, District, Supreme Courts and the Federal Courts of Australia and in alternative dispute resolution settings. He is committed to achieving the optimum commercial outcome for his clients while adhering to the highest standards of professionalism and transparency.

Commenting on this hire, Mills Oakley CEO John Nerurker said the firm was delivering on its strategy to expand the Sydney back-end offering:

“Marc is our third partner hire in the Sydney commercial disputes and insolvency team in the past 18 months, which underlines our commitment to expanding our capability in this space,” he observed. “Marc is highly regarded by clients and will be an asset to the team.”

Commenting on his decision to join Mills Oakley, Marc commented:

“I am excited to be part of a dynamic, collegiate and innovative firm which is clearly committed to growing its insolvency and recoveries capability nationally and I look forward to being part of that journey.”

Marc commenced with Mills Oakley this week.
